"With its sleek glass exterior and innovative work environment, our Tower and Commons building represents our transformation—from being the best life insurance company to being the best financial security company," said John E. Schlifske, chairman and CEO of Northwestern Mutual. "Our new building will help us meet the multiple financial needs of clients for decades to come."

Northwestern Mutual has achieved record growth in recent years and is transforming its business to meet clients' evolving needs. The company is committed to delivering an unmatched client experience that seamlessly combines the expertise of a trusted financial representative with a robust digital platform. The open, flexible spaces of The Tower and Commons present an ideal environment for employees to innovate, helping set the company apart from the rest of the industry and helping clients achieve financial security.

The Tower and Commons strengthens the company's connection to its community and hometown. It's one of the first significant 21st century building projects for Milwaukee and has already reshaped the city's skyline. The Northwestern Mutual Gardens, which offer nearly three acres of landscaped green space, walkways and seating areas, are open to the public. The building's first floor Commons hosts a Starbucks, where the public can purchase beverages and menu choices.

Construction of the Northwestern Mutual Tower and Commons began in fall 2014, and will house approximately 2,400 employees who will move into the new workspace from other buildings that make up the company's downtown and Franklin campuses.

The Tower and Commons has already had a significant economic impact on the city, including:

Employing more than 2,600 individuals who worked on construction of The Tower; including about 1,200 city residents who were previously unemployed or underemployed
Hiring local small business enterprises, which includes minority-owned, women-owned and military-veteran-owned businesses
Becoming a catalyst for other business opportunities downtown
