Company donates to Texas Children's Cancer Center Family Emergency Fund to support those impacted by Hurricane Harvey

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 14, 2017 /PRNewswire/ -- Northwestern Mutual, a leading national financial security company, is committed to giving back to the communities it serves. The company, through its Foundation, is donating $100,000 to the Texas Children's Cancer Center Family Emergency Fund for Hurricane Harvey relief.

Texas Children's Cancer Center Family Emergency Fund supports patients and their families that struggle with basic needs that are critical for their treatment and health. The Emergency Fund helps families with everyday needs, such as transportation to appointments, food and shelter. Because of the disaster affecting the Houston area, there is a greater need to help local families undergoing pediatric cancer treatments.

"The devastation caused by Hurricane Harvey is vast and impacting many patients undergoing care at Texas Children's Cancer Center," said Eric Christophersen, president of the Northwestern Mutual Foundation. "These resources will help support families during their time of need as the hurricane recovery takes place."

Northwestern Mutual has been partnering with Texas Children's Cancer Center since 2012 to support the fight against childhood cancer and advance research.

Northwestern Mutual recently announced its support to theAmerican Red Cross Disaster Responder Program through a $250,000 donation, which provides aid in nearly 64,000 disasters each year, funding food, shelter, supplies, medical and emotional support. In addition, the company's employees and financial advisors have contributed more than $40,000 to the recovery efforts in Houston through the American Red Cross.
