

Northwestern Mutual Appoints Neal Sample to Chief Information Officer

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 12, 2019 /PRNewswire/ -- Northwestern Mutual announced today the appointment of Neal Sample to chief information officer (CIO). Sample will head the technology organization at Northwestern Mutual and be responsible for leading the company's major technology systems and further developing its financial planning digital platforms.

"With his extensive technology management experience and R&D background, Neal is an excellent fit for our chief information officer role," said John Schlifske, chairman, president and CEO, Northwestern Mutual. "Neal's leadership and skill set will have a significant impact as we continue our digital transformation and create a leading digital experience for our clients and advisors."

Sample comes to Northwestern Mutual most recently from Express Scripts, where he served as Chief Operating Officer and led all facets of operations, including information technology, pharmacies, call centers, and client services. Prior to that, he was President of Enterprise Growth at American Express, where he was responsible for all commercial and delivery aspects of a business unit and led large-scale legacy mainframe management and transformation. Earlier in his career, he led cutting-edge technology development and organizations at Yahoo! and eBay.

Sample holds his Ph.D. and M.S. from Stanford University in computer science and an M.S. and B.S. in computer science from the University of Wyoming.
