Northwestern Mutual Expands New York City Presence

Firm opens two new offices in Harlem and Cedarhurst

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 17, 2021 /PRNewswire/ -- Northwestern Mutual, a financial security company focused on comprehensive financial planning through both insurance and investments, is announcing the opening of two new offices within the New York City area in Harlem and Cedarhurst.

"This exciting expansion is an opportunity to deliver financial planning solutions to historically underserved communities," said Tim Gerend, chief distribution officer, Northwestern Mutual. "We're looking forward to developing deep community relationships in both Harlem and Cedarhurst - providing meaningful financial guidance to clients and offering rewarding career opportunities to current and future advisors."

Financial Advisor Anthony Williams will oversee the Harlem office, comprised of several financial professionals who grew up in the neighborhood or nearby in the Bronx. The group plans to draw on their understanding of area residents to identify opportunities for financial education and support for businesses owned by Black, Latinx and other historically underrepresented groups. As the team works to grow its presence in the area, they will focus recruiting efforts locally and within Historically Black Colleges and Universities.

Financial Advisor Moshe Alpert will lead the Cedarhurst office in the predominately Orthodox Jewish community of Five Towns Long Island.

Williams and Alpert will work in close partnership with Managing Partner Steve Abbass, who collaborated with Northwestern Mutual's new Distribution Growth Ventures group to identify the opportunities in Harlem and Cedarhurst. Northwestern Mutual Distribution Growth Ventures is focused on underpenetrated market expansion, competitive recruitment and other innovation within the company's distribution system.
