

After a Year of Uncertainty the Value of Professional Financial Advice Goes Up

Advisors are considered people's most trusted source for guidance

MILWAUKEE, July 21, 2021 /PRNewswire/ -- According to the latest findings from Northwestern Mutual's 2021 Planning & Progress Study, U.S. adults aged 18+ say financial advisors are the most trusted source for financial advice. This represents a reversal from 2020 findings when people said they trusted themselves most.

Americans' most trusted sources of financial advice:

2020	2021
1. Yourself (30%)	1. Financial advisor (26%)
2. Financial advisor (22%)	2. Yourself (20%)
3. Family member (13%)	3. Spouse/partner (16%)

"After the events of the last year, many people are looking for someone they can trust during unpredictable times," said Tim Gerend, executive vice president and chief distribution officer at Northwestern Mutual. "The value of professional advice is on the rise in America."

Guidance through a storm

The study found that the market volatility and economic downturn caused by the Covid-19 pandemic was a major factor influencing individuals to seek out professional financial advice.

Nearly four in ten (38%) Americans currently work with a financial advisor, representing a significant jump from pre-pandemic levels (29%).

Fifteen percent of survey respondents reported that they didn't have a financial advisor pre-pandemic and they now either currently work with an advisor or plan to start working with one.

The trend was most pronounced among younger generations, with 23% of Gen Z and an equal 23% of Millennials reporting that they have or plan to work with a financial advisor as a result of the pandemic's impact on the markets and economy.

"It's encouraging that younger people are taking action with their finances, as this is a crucial step towards creating positive financial planning habits and achieving financial security over the long term," said Gerend. "This study data reflects trends we've been seeing amongst our clients as well - the pandemic has prompted many to revisit their financial plans and seek help from their advisors."

Financial planning priorities

When asked to identify their top financial planning priorities over the next year, respondents identified:

- Paying bills/expenses (48%)
- Saving for retirement (39%)
- Paying off debt/loans (38%)
- Taking care of family (37%)
- Investing (32%)

"Financial decision-making can be difficult, especially when outside factors are at play," said Gerend. "Financial advisors have the expertise and perspective to help simultaneously navigate present priorities while also planning for long-term goals. It's times like these when the value of that becomes crystal clear."
