Company delivers unprecedented payout while earning highest-available financial strength ratings

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 28, 2025 /PRNewswire/ -- Northwestern Mutual is announcing its largest expected dividend payout to policyowners in company history: $9.2 billion in 2026. The record sum is both unprecedented and unmatched: expected to eclipse its 2025 award by nearly $1 billion and remain the industry's largest by a significant margin. In just the past three years, Northwestern Mutual's annual dividend has grown by nearly $2.4 billion – from $6.8 billion in 2023 to $9.2 billion for 2026 – the largest increase in its history.

Northwestern Mutual's legacy of awarding an annual dividend stretches back generations and totals nearly$170 billion. It's a payout the company has proudly delivered for 155 straight years. Even through periods of economic uncertainty, market volatility, and global challenges, Northwestern Mutual has not only maintained but accelerated its dividend growth – demonstrating its resilience and unwavering commitment to policyowners.

"As a proud mutual company, we're committed to sharing our success in the form of dividends with our policyowners at such an extraordinary scale," said Tim Gerend, Northwestern Mutual chairman, president, and CEO. "Our financial strength and unflinching focus on the fundamentals enable us to deliver superior value to policyowners even in moments of volatility. That's why millions of Americans trust our company and our advisors to help them build financial security. Along with our incredible policyowner loyalty, we're well-positioned to continue delivering outstanding product value to them, and for generations to come."

Whole Life Insurance Helps Millions Hedge Against Loss of Income and Market Volatility

The primary purpose of whole life insurance is the lifetime death benefit protection it provides. The need to protect against the loss of income is the foundation to the financial security of surviving family members.

In addition, this flexible financial asset provides value for policyowners while they are living. And a significant risk to Americans' retirement savings is market volatility. A poorly timed downturn in the market can have a devastating impact on anyone's retirement nest egg. Unlike unpredictable investment returns, the accumulated value that builds within a whole life insurance policy is guaranteed to grow, year after year, as long as the premiums are paid – and those funds can be accessed for any reason. That accumulated value can increase even more with dividends.

Northwestern Mutual's Whole Life insurance policyowners will receive an expected$7.9 billion – of the $9.2 billion total payout – in dividends in 2026 which can be used in a variety of ways, including taking it in cash or applying it to future premiums. The vast majority of policyowners use the dividend to purchase paid-up additional insurance, which grows both the accumulated value and death benefit components of their whole life insurance policy.

"Whole life insurance can be a versatile tool in financial planning – and it's part of Northwestern Mutual's DNA," said Gerend. "For almost 170 years, through our trusted financial advisors, we have offered this world-class, flexible financial product to help our clients reach a wide variety of financial goals. In addition to the death benefit protection it provides, the accumulated value allows them to act opportunistically – buying homes, starting businesses, paying for college, funding retirement needs particularly during down markets, and much more. The industry-leading policyowner dividends help our clients grow the accumulated value of their whole life insurance policies, which is the foundation of their comprehensive financial plans, growing their wealth while protecting what they've already built."

Northwestern Mutual's Competitive and Consistent Financial Performance Supports Its Strong Dividend Interest Rate

Backing its insurance and annuity products, Northwestern Mutual's General Account investment portfolio, totaling $360+ billion as of June 2025, is a major contributor to the company's unsurpassed financial strength and policyowner dividends. Annually, Northwestern Mutual's overall portfolio has outperformed other wealth-building vehicles while delivering greater predictability and less risk<sup>iii</sup>.

"The goal of financial planning for most Americans is to reach their unique financial goals predictably, with a high likelihood of success, no matter what tomorrow may bring," said Gerend. "Our approach to financial planning, combining Whole Life insurance with investments, is designed to deliver superior results and help people achieve financial security. In fact, by addressing their financial risks with Whole Life insurance, many of our clients are able to take even more risk in their investment portfolio – because they know that the accumulated values in their policy are guaranteed to grow."
