Consumers can register on the challenge website to play the game. Participants must obtain an entry code through a Northwestern Mutual financial representative to receive access to the game. Consumers can fill out a March Madness Division I men's basketball bracket following the announcement of the 2012 brackets on March 11 through March 15, 2012.[1] The Bracket Challenge provides consumers with a way to enjoy the NCAA tournament based on competition, not based on sports wagering.

The bracket challenge winner with the most points based on their team selections will receive two game tickets, plus four nights at a hotel and domestic airfare to the 2013 Men's Final Four in Atlanta.

"The March Madness tournament is one of the most exciting sports events in the country, and we are thrilled to partner with the Sports Illustrated to offer our financial representatives and sports fans the opportunity to get in on the action," said Conrad York, vice president of marketing. "As our newly formed partnership with the NCAA continues, we look forward to unveiling additional activities beyond March Madness that will engage new and future clients."

The winner will be notified of their prize package on or about April 16, 2012.
