"Student athletes and successful financial professionals are cut from the same cloth; they're disciplined, resilient, and driven to succeed," said Mannebach. "Many families today are facing financial challenges and they're looking for leaders who can provide sound financial guidance to help them meet their goals."

"Northwestern Mutual is a well-respected company with outstanding financial services careers for competitive individuals," said DJ Washington, Career Athletes vice president, career education and training. "They are committed to developing college athletes and embracing the diverse culture of collegiate athletics. It is energizing to watch how both the financial representatives and student-athletes interact in harmony at each campus. It is Northwestern Mutual's willingness to recruit motivated college student-athletes of all majors, competing at every level, that separates them from others in its class."

Northwestern Mutual is taking active steps to grow its field force to keep pace with the growing demand for financial security guidance, products and services. According to Northwestern Mutual data, interest in risk protection soared in 2010; total insurance policy count grew by 9.2% and the number of new clients jumped 4%.

This year Northwestern Mutual will add more than 2,000 financial representatives and more than 2,500 financial representative interns. Unlike other careers impacted by the stagnant economy, the Northwestern Mutual financial professional career is in high-demand and its offices nationwide are adding and training new financial representatives and interns.

"Americans are seeking financial guidance and want to work with companies that have been consistently financially strong," Mannebach said. "It's a trend we fully believe will continue this year, so we're seeking to substantially grow our field force with exceptional talent nationwide."
