

Sales of Risk Products Soar at Northwestern Mutual

Year-to-date results suggest Americans are embracing long-term planning

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 22, 2012 /PRNewswire/ -- Northwestern Mutual, a leading provider of financial security planning and solutions, announced today that sales of its risk products are up substantially year-to-date. Sales of life insurance policies have increased roughly nine percent over the comparable period last year. Sales of disability insurance and long-term care have both seen double-digit gains over the same period last year – with disability up 15% and long-term care insurance climbing 13%.

"The steady and sustained growth we've seen in the sales of our risk products -- not just this year, but over the last several years -- is evidence that long-term planning, prudent risk management, and an emphasis on financial security have taken hold in America," said Greg Oberland, Northwestern Mutual executive vice president. "That said, our consumer research also suggests that there's still room for improvement among many Americans when it comes to financial planning."

Northwestern Mutual's Planning & Progress Study, conducted earlier this year, found that a large number of Americans (half of those surveyed) take an informal approach to financial planning, and even more (59%) feel their financial planning needs improvement.

The findings also indicate that Americans are feeling risk-averse and cautious with their money. The majority of people surveyed are taking steps to pay down their debt (62%), develop a budget (61%), save a portion of their paycheck regularly (58%) and build up an emergency fund (58%).

"To our way of thinking, there's no substitute for identifying your goals with clarity; developing a long-term plan that manages growth and risk holistically; then staying on course with a high level of discipline," said Oberland. "That's the road to financial security. It's simple, but not easy. But that's our call to action."
