"For 17 years our office has been involved with John Theissen's group and we are very passionate about the work he does to support kids and families who are battling childhood cancer and other diseases," said Craig Quinlan, managing partner, The Quinlan Financial Group. "This grant comes at a special time for the organization as many of the Foundation's families are still dealing with the effects of Hurricane Sandy. Diseases like childhood cancer take an emotional and financial toll, so we're looking forward to helping more kids and families find happiness with this extra financial support."

More than 43 volunteers, including the managing partner, financial representatives and support staff from the Northwestern Mutual office, have logged more than 470 volunteer hours. The Quinlan Financial Group volunteers at every event the Children's Foundation holds, regularly staffs the Family Fun Center, and serves at the registration table during the annual 5K run/walk. Along with volunteer hours, the group is a platinum sponsor of the John Theissen Children's Foundation Casino Night and regularly donates to supply and gift drives.

The $50,000 grant will focus on families most affected by Hurricane Sandy. Specifically, funding will be put toward medical costs, patient wish lists and toy drives.

"The Children's Foundation sees Northwestern Mutual as a partner in our success of caring for the community," said John Theissen, executive director and founder, John Theissen Children's Foundation. "As part of supporting our neighbors, we have already spent an unplanned $20,000 to help those affected by Hurricane Sandy, so this grant will help us not only fill that void, but also allow us to support families fighting disease."

The Community Impact Award annually recognizes Northwestern Mutual offices that demonstrate exemplary service with a local nonprofit.

"Northwestern Mutual is proud to strengthen the communities in which we live and work," said John Kordsmeier, president, Northwestern Mutual Foundation. "Few things are more rewarding than bringing children joy, especially those who've endured and battled so much. The John Theissen Children's Foundation, along with the Quinlan Financial Group, are helping countless families on Long Island forget about their daily challenges and find some happiness."
